

About one-third of the world's food supply is produced by small, mostly family-run farms.

These farms integrate livestock with crops in regenerative and circular agricultural systems.