

Pastoralism provides a path to adaptation for the 268 million livestock herders who are significant contributors of livestock derived foods and products in Africa.

Pastoralists are herding communities that graze their animals on rangelands, providing 75% of Africa's milk and more than 50% of its meat.