

Controlling human diseases transmitted from animals could save 2.2m lives every year

People are healthier—and safer—when their livestock are healthy; we need to detect animal diseases early and to manage them effectively—before they jump to people.